A blind boy named Louis Braille invented the braille code for reading and writing by touch. His codes for letters, numbers, and music have been used all around the world for almost 200 years.